New Areas in FINAL FANTASY XI: Chains of Promathia

Once you install and register the FINAL FANTASY XI: Chains of Promathia expansion, you will be able to access even more areas that contain all new quests and missions for you to try your hand at. Here are some of the areas you will be able to adventure in:

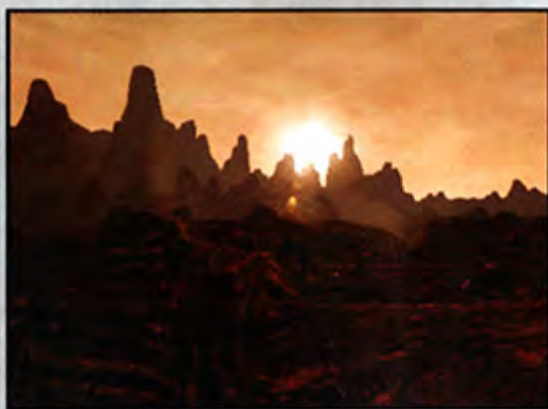

ATTOHWA CHASM

Attohwa, meaning "arid" in ancient Mithran, is the name given to the chasm that traverses the eastern part of Aragonau. As the name suggests, very little rain falls here, resulting in a parched, broken land where poisonous gases erupt from cracks in the earth.

However, many unique forms of life have adapted to this harsh environment. The antlions, for example, conceal themselves beneath the ground to avoid the sunlight and ambush unwary prey. The beautiful but deadly gasponia flowers feed on the noxious fumes expelled from the earth.

Once, several forbidding cliffs had to be scaled in order to reach Attohwa Chasm. However, a mountaineer recently discovered an underground route that now allows adventurers to travel to this area with relative ease.

According to Mithran folklore, the mountaineer who discovered this route went in search of Parradamo Tor, a hill said to lie somewhere beyond the chasm, and was never heard from again...

ULEGUERAND RANGE

This mountainous region is the highest area above sea level on the Quon continent. Though the Orcs created passes over some of its slopes, crossing the range presents a daunting challenge, for the climb is steep and snowstorms blow in from every angle of the convoluted terrain.

In a time when the Orcs had little skill in navigating the seas, their army reached the northern cliffs by skirting a succession of islands, then marched over the Uleguerand Range to stage their incursions into Xarcabard. In an attempt to stem the beastman tide, the outnumbered knights of San d'Oria often clashed with the Orcish forces upon the actual mountain range.

"Thousandfall Ridge," mentioned in the histories of the Warking Acheufagais R d'Oraguille, was famous as a site for the fiercest battles. These days, daredevil explorers test their luck by sliding down its sheer slopes.

TAVNAZIAN ARCHIPELAGO

This chain of tiny islands off the west coast of Quon was once home to the proud nation of Tavnazia.

Before the Great War, this region was actually a peninsula connected with the mainland. However, a devastating explosion caused by a secret weapon of the beastmen resulted in the disintegration of a large portion of the surrounding landscape. The explosion also sent the nation's capital, a city built on the profits of its thriving trade business, into ruin.

The remnants of the beastman army remain in control of the archipelago. Until now, it was thought that none of the Tavnazian people had survived.

TAVNAZIAN SAFEHOLD

This settlement is an extension of the underground complex that served as a haven for survivors of the war-ravaged Tavnazian Marquisate.

As the ruins of the city above are still occupied by remnants of the beastman army, the people of the safehold below are concerned primarily with survival. The Tavnazian Safehold has sufficient resources to function as a town, though little remains of the once proud capital's unmatched wealth and beauty.

PSO'XJA

These extensive underground ruins have been controlled by the Tenshodo for many years, their secrets known only to a select group of researchers.

Archaeologists believe the grand hallways and countless chambers are the remains of a city populated by the ancients. However, the existence of numerous traps within the ruins leads others to dispute this theory.

In addition, reliefs that exhibit geometric patterns and avatars in recurring themes can be found carved into the walls. The origins of these carvings still remain a mystery.

What lies behind the Tenshodo's sudden decision to open the ruins to adventurers...?

BIBIKI BAY

This inlet in the southeast of Mindartia looks out on the Gugru Blue. Sheltered by a multitude of tiny islands, its tranquil waters were once used by Tarutaru fisherfolk to farm vast quantities of shellfish and seaweed.

After the Great War, the cultivation of Bibiki Bay was abandoned as the Mithra brought their expertise in fishing to the mainland. However, many of the bay's bounties of aquaculture, including the magically enlarged shellfish known as "uragnite," remained untouched.

The Fishermen's Guild, seeing the bay's potential, recently paid for the right to begin fishing in the area. The guild intends to make its small fishing vessels, or "manaclippers," available for use by adventurers in the near future.

Also, in order to bring in ordinary sightseers, the Fishermen's Guild is attempting to gain permission to land on the beautiful beaches of Purgonorgo Isle. They are currently conducting negotiations with the isle's mysterious and wealthy owner.

PHOMIUNA AQUEDUCTS

These expansive aqueducts are a fitting architectural achievement for Tavnazia, which was known as the "City of Water." Before the war, most of the city's major facilities drew their waters from the aqueducts, but now few canals remain.

The Phomiuna Aqueducts are connected to the underground sacrarium of the fallen cathedral. However, due to the powerful wards erected by a certain cardinal, the state of the sacrarium's interior is known to but a few.

And there is also the question of the holy artifact said to be enshrined within the sacrarium's walls...

MOVALPOLOS

The subterranean city of Movalpolos was dug and built by a tribe of Goblins referred to as the Moblins. Due to the nomadic nature of most Goblins, it is extremely rare for any of these beastmen to reside together in one place, making this community quite unique.

The Moblins are known for their exceptional smithing and alchemy skills. Their achievements include complex drilling apparatuses and floodlights as well as several advances in exotic fields such as bionics. It is even rumored that their ability in these areas matches or exceeds that of the scientists in Bastok.

As the Moblins drill through Vana'diel's crust, they are constantly moving their homes, water tanks, and scaffolding. This continuous advancement of Movalpolos makes it difficult to locate the city at any one time.

While some Moblins venture to the surface to sell ores mined from the rock surrounding their city, most of the tribe's members have cut themselves off from the outside world. Because of this isolation, little is known about the city, even among other Goblins.

Why have the Moblins chosen this life underground, and why do they continue to move?
